Kansas Department of Revenue stands ready to assist citizens affected by the recent tornadoes

TOPEKA – As Kansans begin to rebuild from the recent tornadoes, the Kansas Department of Revenue is taking steps to make that process less difficult.

“While the department cannot repair the damage wrought by recent tornadoes we can help make parts of the rebuilding easier,” said Kansas Revenue Secretary Nick Jordan.

The department will be waiving fees for those who need to replace identification and documents lost in the storms.

“A new driver’s license or vehicle title is one step on the path to rebuilding lives,” said Kansas Director of Vehicles Donna Shelite. “We’re happy to help our fellow citizens get back on their feet.”

Those who lost their driver’s license in the storms can go to a full service driver’s license office, show a document, such as their FEMA identification number, a utility bill, school document or other mail that lists their address, proving they lived in one of the storm affected areas and Kansas will replace the license or identification card free of charge.

Those who need to replace vehicle titles lost in the storms can get a free replacement by visiting their local county treasurer’s office.

For those who lost vehicles in the storms, they can bring in insurance claims to their local county treasurer’s office and apply for a refund for the vehicle’s tags.

Businesses still need to file monthly state sales and withholding taxes. For businesses affected by the storms, who are busy trying to reopen, the department will waive any late filing fees they incur if they file those taxes late.

If people need replacement copies of their tax returns, they can call 785-368-8222, and the department will provide a copy for free.
